

Dear friends,

I would like to inform you that, since 1995, year of first issue, Giornale Italiano di Psicopatologia/The Italian Journal of Psychopathology has received and published high quality articles and has started to build its readership.

We invite contributions from a variety of scientific topics related to all aspects of descriptive psychopathology in clinical and experimental contexts (i.e., experimental methods in neuropsychology and experimental psychopathology) including, but not limited to, the etiology, developmental pathways, risk factors, epidemiology, cultural issues, psychotherapy, pharmacological interventions, and management of mental disorders. Child psychopathology, developmental psychopathology, biological psychopathology, evolutionary developmental psychopathology, cognitive neuropsychiatry and clinical neuropsychology are examples of disciplines that can offer important contribution to psychopathology in the description and analysis of mental disorders. Our aim is to stimulate critical debates about current developments and/or controversies related to mental disorders, mental health and psychiatric treatment. All submissions will undergo a rigorous, fair and prompt editorial peer review.

We look forward to receiving your submissions!
